The Parador of Toledo (official name is Parador Conde De Orgaz) is set on a remarkable site, the "Hill of the Emperor," that has unmatched views out over the city below. From the Parador's terrace restaurant and from many of the rooms, there can be had a panoramic view of the city spread out below. One can see how the grand old city of Toledo is like an island - almost completely encircled by the Tajo river. This has restricted its growth, and for this reason, there is a high concentration of fascinating, centuries-old buildings all within walking distance.

The Toledo Parador building was originally built by the Count of Toledo in the 14th century and is completely Toledan in character. The official name of the Toledo Parador is the "Parador Conde de Orgaz" comes from the famous painting by El Greco - an adopted son of Toledo - titled "The Burial of the Count of Orgaz."
